The Report: Ghana

The Battle of the Field: The Multi-volume International Encyclopedia of Laws, this very useful study of constitutional law in Nigeria provides essential information on the country’s constitutional law, its form of government, and its administrative structure. Lawyers who handle international matters will appreciate the clarifications of particular terminology and its application. Throughout the book, the treatment emphasizes the specific point of view of the legal system of the nation, being the result of a key local expert descriptive political system, the historical background, the role of treaties, legislation, jurisprudence, and administrative regulations. The discussion of the form and structure of the country’s constitution is brief, but sufficient to acquaint the reader with the major constitutional issues, the role of the judiciary, and the nature of the administrative system. The book is a valuable source of information for those who wish to understand the legal system of Nigeria.

In What the Food Companies Tell Us: The Politics of Hunger in the Modern World, Sacks gives us an aisle-by-aisle tour of the ingredients in our food and how we can remove (or at least minimize) them in our diets. Sacks helps us understand why our food system is structured the way it is and what we can do about it.

Sacks shows how the industrial food system has been designed to create demand for processed foods that are high in fat, sugar, and salt, and how these foods are marketed to us through advertising and labeling. He also explains how the food industry manipulates our perceptions of health and nutrition through its use of marketing techniques and public relations campaigns.

Junior Graphic

Daily Graphic This book explores the key players, challenges and policies affecting higher education in Africa. It also explores the marketing strategies and the students’ selection process, providing theoretical and practical insights into education marketing in Africa. In particular, it focuses on the competition for students. The growing number of student enrolments, the public sector’s inability to meet the ever-increasing demands and new private universities springing up mean that it is essential for universities to identify their market and effectively communicate their messages. Although there has been substantial theoretical research to help shed light on students’ choice and universities’ marketing strategies, little work has been undertaken on higher education in the African context. Filling that gap in the research, while at the same time acknowledging the regional differences in Africa, this book offers empirical insights into the higher education market across the continent.

Teen Lives around the World: A Global Encyclopedia [2 volumes] The book is a must read for policy makers, academics, university administrators and postgraduate research students in the broad field of education and in higher education studies in particular. The book brings together a wealth of information regarding the imperatives of transformation in Africa’s higher education systems. Not only do some of the chapters provide critical discussion about the conceptualisation of transformation, the majority of the chapters reflect on empirical evidence for transformation in diverse fields of mathematics, science, gender, the training of Deleted students and the governance and management of universities. This central theme of sustainable change and reform runs across the chapters of the book. For students, the book provides examples of practical research in higher education. For scholars in higher education and policy makers, specific issues for reform are identified and discussed.
